Nick Page loves to make and share music with his students, and its likely that you will too by the time youve finished his passionate, thought-provoking book. You will also have developed a new understanding of and appreciation for the role music can play in supporting learners. A music educator and song leader who has devoted his professional life to helping people of all ages realize that they are capable of great miracles through the simple, yet powerful, act of singing, Nick is particularly devoted to multicultural music and works diligently to promote music of diverse cultures. Rich with ideas on how to use music in the classroom, Music as a Way of Knowing will appeal especially to classroom teachers who are not musicians, but who enjoy and learn from music and want to use it with their students. Indeed, Nick reveals the truth of the Zimbabwean adage: If you can talk, you can sing. If you can walk, you can dance. Nick provides simple instructions for writing songs, using music to support learning across the curriculum, teaching singing effectively, and finding good songs. He assures you that with time, all students can sing well. The good news is that once youve read this book, youll have the confidence to trust yourself-and your students-to sing and learn well through the joy and power of music.
